Baby Sherpa Diaper Backpack Review

Backpack Diaper Bag Innovative, Built for Travel and Everyday Use

© Kelby CarrOct 7, 2006

I'm not the least bit surprised that parents were behind the Baby Sherpa diaper backpack. I can think of few diaper bags I've encountered that are so useful for travel.

The Baby Sherpa diaper backpack has a splendid design, and a convenient spot for everything. While many diaper bags require that most baby gear be thrown together, the Baby Sherpa has useful sections. This includes a spot for the parents' electronics, and a built-in bottle cooler.

Putting the Baby Sherpa to a Real-Life Test

I took this diaper backpack on a test outing, stuffing in necessities for infant twins and a 3-year-old. Not only did everything fit, but it was the possible exception of clothes stuffed in the very bottom).

The babies' bottles and a cooler pack slid into the cooler at the bottom, and two juice boxes cooler pouch. A water bottle for us fit into a pouch on the other side. The babies' diapers tucked into a large pocket inside the top inner lining (actually designed to hold electronics like a cam pump). The toddler's just-in-case pull-up diaper fit in another pocket.

Small items like pacifiers and toys were popped into the netting just inside the top. I didn't even have a zippered pocket nearby. I stuffed blankets, as well as backup clothes for all three children, in a section. Just when I thought I might not have room for my wipe packet (about two-inches thick), I found a criss-crossing bungee cord on the back. The wipes slid right in, and I tightened the cord to hold them in place.

Wearing the Baby Sherpa Diaper Backpack

Personally, I hate carrying a diaper bag. They get heavy, and usually flop all over the place when you're not wearing them. It's not just because it is a backpack, which is just by nature handier than a shoulder bag, but also nestles close to the back, and features a sternum and waist strap that are handy for hiking with babies.

Using the Baby Sherpa Diaper Backpack

This is where the real test comes into play. Even in high-pressure moments like sudden dia go or babies screaming for bottles (both at the same time, of course), it was easy to get rigl I discovered the top actually has a double zipper, allowing you to unzip one side or the othe whole innards.

The only downside I discovered was that the bag was a bit top-heavy when setting it down. to the cooler being on the bottom, and it containing only two bottles (although it's built to ho several soda cans and/or some snacks for the kids). I also had to put the bottles in sidew tops on tightly to avoid leaking. While this is an issue, I can't really think of a way to change address it short of creating a backpack so long you wouldn't want to carry it.

Bottom Line

The Baby Sherpa diaper backpack is just well-designed. It was also clearly created with re and with traveling parents in mind. It gives you a hands-free option, instead of pesky shoul whenever you bend over to kiss a boo-boo or whenever you need to dig for tickets at the ai

This is a must-have if you will do heavy-duty traveling with babies. But even for weekend or, really, just regular about-town use, this outshines most diaper bags on the market. Plus, How cool is that?
